

Revaluation of your deferred pension

Information for members of the Rolls-Royce Pension Engine Control Systems Pension Scheme

How revaluation works

Your deferred pension is revalued using a method called Statutory Revaluation. This is published by the Government each year and aims to protect the value of your pension from being reduced by inflation.

Additionally, we check the result of this increase against the increases we give to members who are receiving their retirement pensions (pension in payment increases).

Your pension is automatically revalued by the method that produces the best increase for you.

Statutory Revaluation applied to Pension

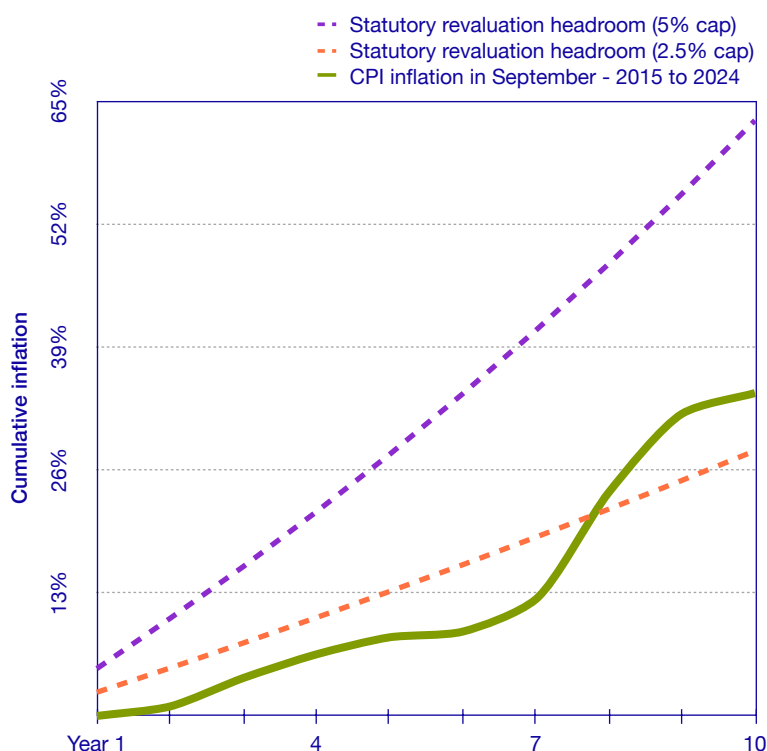

Statutory Revaluation doesn't provide unlimited protection against inflation. For any pension you earned before 2009, the cap is 5% each year and for pension accrued after 2009 it is 2.5%.

The good news is that these caps are tested over the whole period of your deferment and not by individual year. So whether the cap 'bites' or not is dependent on the level of the cap and the length of your deferment.

If your period of deferment includes years when inflation was low, you may have built up a significant amount of headroom against the cap. That helps when there's a period of high inflation, as there's room for an increase to be applied that's equal or close to the actual inflation rate.

The graph illustrates how it's worked over the 10 years to 2024. As you can see, the high inflation seen in 2022 and 2023 has had an impact but if inflation remains below the caps, this should improve the situation going forwards.

Some older Engine Control Systems section pensions use a method of revaluation with a higher cap. If this applies to you, you'll always benefit from the higher cap.

Pension in payment increases applied to deferred pension

This method of revaluation used different caps and looks at different periods of earned pension. The rules are detailed below:

- Pension earned before 6 April 1997 is increased by the Retail Prices Index (RPI) up to a maximum of 3% a year
- Pension earned between 6 April 1997 to 30 June 2005 is increased by RPI up to a maximum of 5% a year

- Pension earned from 1 July 2005, is increased by RPI* up to a maximum of 2.5% a year

The first increase applied is a proportion of a full year's increase, based on the number of complete months between the date of deferment and the following 1 April.

When are increases in deferment applied?

Statutory Revaluation increases are applied to your pension on the anniversary of the date that you became a deferred member.

Our online estimator only includes revaluation to the current year - even if you choose a retirement date for a future year. We do this because future levels of inflation are very difficult to predict and also so you can see what your pension is worth in today's money.

Statutory Revaluation is published by the Government in mid-November each year. Because we allow members to get guaranteed quotes in advance of their retirement date, you may be entitled to a further increase if your guaranteed quote was issued

- before mid-November and;
- for a date in the following year

You can still make your choice based on your guaranteed quote, safe in the knowledge that we'll apply any increase due to you when we start to pay your benefits.

Is there anything I should be aware of when selecting my retirement date?

When picking a retirement date, we recommend using our online estimator to try a few different retirement dates throughout the year. The reason for this is that most (and in some cases all) of the revaluation of your deferred pension is based on the number of complete years that you've been a deferred member.

That means there can be quite a difference in your retirement estimate depending on whether you choose a retirement date before or after the anniversary of the date you became deferred.

There's no limit to how many estimates you can get online, so make sure you do your research and pick the date that provides you with the best retirement pension.
